Hinton High School 1941

Central Elementary School Burns

Following the construction and opening of the New Hinton High School in 1926, the old building became Central Elementary. Central Elementary was destroyed by fire on 23 January 1940. The following photos and article were provided by Fred Long.

AS FLAMES DEVoured CENTRAL SCHOOL BUILDING

...These striking photographs show the spectacular glare of flame and smoke against the night sky as fire gutted the old Central school. Upper left gives the scene from the Ballegee street entrance; upper right is the picture the roaring flames made at their height, showing a part of the throng of hundreds who gathered to watch; center, firemen play a stream of water on the burning building from a point beside the Carnegie library. The two bottom photos give you the scene as it looked from Fourth avenue, the left one after one of the brick gables had tottered and fallen.

HISTORY OF HINTON HIGH SCHOOL

PART XLVI

By Frederick D. Long

Wednesday, January 24, 1940.

A blanket of snow, measuring almost seven inches in depth, covered the City. It had been snowing, almost continuously for the past twenty-four hours, but by 7:30 a.m. it had slackened off to a few drifting flakes. The temperature had dropped from a high of 30 degrees Tuesday to a low of 12 degrees above zero.

The falling temperatures brought added hazards as the deepest snow in several years turned into a coat of dangerous ice.

Mr. C. N. Gwinn, assistant county superintendent of schools, stated that only two school bus routes in the county would be suspended on account of the snow. They were the Elk Knob and Sand Knob routes carrying pupils to the Hinton High School. The schools would be open.

The furnace in the Central school worked hard that day--but no one can say if that was the cause of it. The coal room was nearby, and much of the day was spent "feeding the furnace that had been installed new a five or six years before, it was in good condition.

School let out at its usually appointed time. Over four hundred students marched from the Central school building, then the teachers left. J. Logan Cox, janitor, went about the twenty room building doing his daily tasks.

The building had been remodelled the past summer, new floors and ceilings, new joists and light fixtures had been installed. This work had cost almost $6,000, one-third of what the entire building had cost when built in 1896, forty-four years ago, but it had been worth it. The Board had determined that the building, although old, would stand for several years to come. Several years ago there had been talk of tearing the old building down. But that was back in the twenties.

In the old school paper, Orange and Black of January 24, 1930, Maude McLean wrote a column titled "Hinton High School in 1940." She predicted that the "old" Central building would be "Torn down." Now ten years had gone by, to the day, and the school was still standing.

The school housed 458 children, one of the largest enrollments since the new Hinton High School had been built; 172 elementary students and 286 seventh and eighth grade pupils were using the building.

It was about 5:00 o'clock. Mr. Logan Cox went to the basement to check the furnace that was located almost directly under the stairway leading to it, and the stairways leading to the other stories directly overhead. Everything was in order, he left the building.

Starting home, walking up Ballengee Street, on the opposite side of the street; he looked back towards the Central school and saw black smoke coming from the building. In a very few minutes the top of the building was ablaze. Cox turned in the alarm and firemen were on the scene almost immediately. Soon several hundred persons had gathered to watch the fire.

The fire spread rapidly as the Hinton fireman laid four lines to the building; two from the fire truck, a 1926 Seagrave; and one from a water hydrant at the corner of Fourth avenue and Ballengee Street, another from a hydrant at the corner of Temple and Fourth Avenue.

Soon four streams of water were turned into the basement; but due to the configuration of the building, the stairways acting as a "flue" that carried the blaze skyward acting as a certain suction to its ascent, flames climbed quickly to the upper floors.

The fire truck carried 1250 feet of hose and all of it was being used. Fire Chief, Sam Boland, ordered that another 500 feet, which the department kept at Bellepoint, be brought to the scene and a line be laid to the hydrant at the corner of Temple and Third avenue.

The upper floors at the rear of the building were ablaze and great columns of black smoke were rising from the school, flames shooting through the roof. The flames advanced rapidly to the front of the school, then drove downward toward the lower floors. The fire-fighters could do practically nothing to bring it under control.

A short time later the roof caved in, one of the brick gables on the Fourth avenue side near the Hinton High School toppled outward, almost crushing a fireman; falling at the feet of the hundreds of spectators that had gathered closely to watch.

For more than six hours firemen battled the blazing inferno. After the fire had gone beyond control, efforts were directed toward preventing spread of the flames to the high school and library building, one on each side, separated from the burning school by only a few feet.

Through the long hours, residents of the neighborhood, Mrs. Ira Briers, Mrs. Charlie Lane, Miss Frances Bowman, Joe Lipscomb, Miss Gertrude Lipscomb, Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Hanifin and Fred Maddy, supplied the firemen with hot coffee.

Finally the fire burned out and only the charred brick shell remained.
